Mobile American Notary & Apostilles is not a law firm. We do not provide legal advice, do not recommend whether revocation is right for your situation, do not tell you what to write, and do not review completed forms for legal accuracy. If you have any question about how to fill out this form, whether it is the right form for your needs, or how California law applies to your situation, please consult a licensed California attorney.

After You Sign

A revocation of a power of attorney is only effective as to third parties who receive actual notice of the revocation. Deliver a signed and notarized copy of this revocation to every person or institution that has been dealing with your former agent under the original power of attorney (banks, brokerages, title companies, hospitals, care providers, and so on). Keep the original for your records.

If the original power of attorney was recorded with a county recorder (for example, because it authorized real estate transactions), record this revocation with the same county recorder so that it appears in the chain of title.
